A Journal Dedicated to Jungian Typology. Jungian analyst James Hillman (1980) wisely said, "The desire to see and the need to be seen cannot be overestimated; when such seeing and being seen takes place, it is like a blessing" (p. 2). Divorcing couples who come to mediation interact with the mediator and each other differently depending on their different typological functions.

Egalitarianism (from French égal, meaning 'equal'), or equalitarianism, is a school of thought within political philosophy that builds from the concept of social equality, prioritizing it for all people. Egalitarian doctrines are generally characterized by the idea that all humans are equal in fundamental worth or moral status. Egalitarianism is the doctrine that all citizens of a state ...

Egalitarianism - Wikipedia

Egalitarian obligations only arise within a coercive political structure. That the state holds coercive power over the citizens means that they should each be treated equally and, perhaps, that the state should engage in redistribution to pursue equality of holdings. Various forms of this view appeal to different features of the state.

In any case, I first became acutely aware of the objective-subjective conundrum reading Egalitarian Typologies Versus the Perception of the Unique, by James Hillman (Eranos Lecture 4, Spring Pub., 1986), whose school of Archetypal Psychology is founded on the conception of psychological creativity (rather than pathology and/or the presupposition of a normative psychology). This small book of 59 pages contains examples from poets like Wallace Stevens, to help articulate its main points.
