Cut a 5–6 in (13–15 cm) piece of crepe paper and fold it in thirds. Set the bow you just made aside, then unroll a piece of streamer that's about 5–6 in (13–15 cm) long. Cut it free of the roll, then fold the top third down and the bottom third up to create a long, narrow strip. This will be the center of your bow.

If the paper doesn't stay fixed, your arrow can make a hole in the paper, and the result of your shot will not make any sense. You can fix the tuning paper from the ceiling, or you can build your own paper tuning system (like a wooden frame that holds the paper stable.) However, if you're not going to use it constantly, I'd say it's ...

Put a piece of tape on the end of the strap, with the sticky side facing up. The end of the strap without tape can then be pulled until the other end is under the loop. Then, take the tape on that end and secure it to the loop. Then, attach the other long rectangle to the remaining end of the first with tape.
