Byung-Chul Han, a star of German philosophy, continues his passionate critique of neoliberalism, trenchantly describing a regime of technological domination that, in contrast to Foucault's biopower, has discovered the productive force of the psyche. In the course of discussing all the facets of neoliberal psychopolitics fueling our contemporary crisis of freedom, Han elaborates an analytical framework that provides an original theory of Big Data and a lucid phenomenology of emotion.

Insightfully thinks through how neoliberalism compels people to voluntarily auto regulate and optimize themselves. Riffing off Foucault's concept of biopolitics, Han claims that the state, in close collaboration with Big Data, has started to rule by psychopolitics, a new form of power based on controlling not the body but the mind.

In Psychopolitics: Neoliberalism and New Technologies of Power, the English translation by Erik Butler released by Verso in 2017, Korean-born German philosopher Byung-Chul Han would likely agree with the parallel I'm drawing between the drug-using gamblers' addictions and my own more subtle, technological one, interrupting, as it did, my ability to truly contemplate. Han, however, does not use the language of addiction, but of religious fervor.

Psychopolitics by Han, Byung-Chul (ebook)

Byung-Chul Han's Psychopolitics: Neoliberalism and New Technologies of Power, originally published in German (Han's adopted tongue) in 2013, is an attempt to anchor neoliberal strategies of subjugation in a single concept, or, rather, operation, which he inscribes in Foucault's biopolitics, Deleuze's society of control, and Stiegler's psycho-technological telecracy (the reduction of people to compulsive creatures of consumption through televisual communication).

Review: Natasha Lushetich on Psychopolitics: Neoliberalism ...

Han. In his book Psychopolitics: Neoliberalism and New Technologies of Power (2017), the Korean-German philosopher Byung-Chul Han put forward another new concept to analyse forms of domination in neoliberal societies: psychopolitics. The term refers to the type of control that societies exercise through the use of personal information. According to Han, the web, social media, and big data are ...
