Reinterpreting the archaeology of early first-century Nazareth also has many implications for interpreting the Gospels. For example, in view of the exclusively Jewish character of Early Roman-period Nazareth and its immediate adjacent landscape, it is extremely unlikely that Jesus was influenced by Classical philosophy, making the "Cynic ...

Overview. Mark D. Fullerton blends the art of the Roman period with its history of political intrigue, military and religious ideologies, and intercultural interaction. The book not only explores the art of Rome itself but also that of the Roman provinces, including Syria, Egypt, Algeria, Greece and the British Isles, showing how Roman art drew from and influenced the wider ancient world.

Lead sling bullets like this one were widely used in the Greek and Roman world. This sling bullet is a typical biconical (almond) shape and was probably made in a two part mold. The mold was incised with a spear and a winged thunderbolt (a common symbol of power), resulting in the raised designs you see on the final cast bullet.

More than 30 years ago, the late ancient historian Mark Golden published an article with a title that baldly asked the question “Did the Ancients Care When Their Children Died?” (GaR 35.2, 1988, 152-63). His trenchant framing and analysis of this issue largely set the terms of the scholarly debate that has followed.
