Difference Between Literature and Language (with ...

The literary language is not the same thing as the language of literature. These are different, but related, concepts. The literary language is the property of all who have mastered its rules. It functions in both written and spoken form. The language of literature (the language of writers) usually orients itself to the same norms, but it contains a great deal that is individual and not generally accepted. The closeness of the literary language and the language of literature has varied in ...

literature | Definition, Scope, Types, & Facts | Britannica

Language can be simply defined as the study of sounds, words, and sentences whereas literature is the study of written work. The existence of literature is solely based on language. The main difference between language and literature is that language deals with both spoken and written aspects whereas literature mainly deals with written work.

Difference Between Language and Literature

A literary language is the form of a language used in its literary writing. It can be either a non-standard dialect or standardized variety of the language. It can sometimes differ noticeably from the various spoken lects, but difference between literary and non-literary forms is greater in some languages than in others. Where there is a strong divergence between a written form and the spoken vernacular, the language is said to exhibit diglossia. The understanding of the term differs from one li
